“Do not say after my parinirvana that pure practitioners have no protector. Now that I have taught the Prātimokṣa Sūtra and the excellent vinaya well, regard these as the World-honored One after my parinirvana.”

—Śākyamuni Buddha in the Prātimokṣa Sūtra

Nearly twenty-six centuries ago in India, our world had the extraordinary great fortune to have the appearance of a fully awakened Buddha who turned the wheel of Dharma. His teachings spread and flourished throughout Asia and, in the last century or two, have spread to Europe, the Americas, Australia, and Africa as well.

The Buddha gave us three “baskets” of teachings—the vinaya, the sūtras, and the abhidharma—all of which must be studied and practiced to maintain Buddhism as a living tradition. While all practitioners can engage with the sūtras and abhidharma, it is only the saṅgha that commit themselves to practicing the vinaya. Thus saṅgha communities are necessary for the preservation of the Buddha’s complete doctrine. The existence of these communities in a land is the measure of the Buddhadharmā flourishing in that place.

Traditionally, the saṅgha has been entrusted to learn and pass down the Buddha’s teachings from one generation to another. To transmit the entirety of the Buddhadharmā to a new land, it is essential that there are monastics who learn the vinaya and use it to guide their daily lives. They must train in both the prohibitive and prescriptive precepts, the prohibitive precepts being actions to abandon, the prescriptive precepts being activities that the saṅgha should engage in.

This book is based on a series of oral teachings by Vinaya Master Bhikṣu Benyin given during a triple ordination platform in Taiwan. As a clear and easy-to-understand introduction to the prescriptive precepts, Karmans for the Creation of Virtue: The Prescriptive Precepts in the Dharmaguptaka Vinaya is a contribution to the growing body of vinaya literature in English.

Free copy for ordained monastics

Donors in Taiwan and the U.S. have kindly made offerings so the book can be offered to monastics without charge. Ordained Buddhist monastics may request a copy or write for more information by sending an email to books.sravasti@gmail.com.

If you live in a monastic community and many members would like a copy of the book, please request the total number of copies your community wants so that all books can be sent in one shipment.
